First National Conference on

Water, Soil and Environment Sustainability

4th November 2024
Mascara

1NCWSE-S'2024

Preamble

Water and soil make up the foundation of our environment. The management of these resources must be sustainable in order to preserve their long-term availability and quality. Water is an indispensable resource for life, but due to climate change and human action, their availability tends to decrease in many regions. Like water, soil is often considered an endless resource and is often over-exploited. Moreover, many degradation processes of physical, chemical and biological and weathering lead to soil erosion and pollution, which has serious consequences, including disrupting the natural balance, reducing water infiltration, storage and restitution for streams and groundwater, and risking the sustainability of future ecosystems.

In this context, our conference calls for an integrated management of water and soil as interconnected resources and implementing sustainable environment development practices. It focuses on raising awareness about the significance of water and soil, and also empowers and involves academic and scientific community, managers, organizations and PhD students to enhance this issue. The conference underscores the vital fact that water and soil are interconnected, and sustainable practices must be put in place to improve natural resources availability for life and ecosystems in Algeria.
